I'm not a big fan of taking buses. The bus is always full of people, and they are not polite, noisy, and rude sometimes. To be honest, I really 36 taking the bus, but not now.

About a month ago, I was on a packed bus after work. Everyone was so smelly from the heat, and it was really disgusting. It was so bad I almost threw up, but I just told myself to think about the good time I 37 that night. Then, I got a call from my friend who said she couldn't make it to the movie because she had to work late. I told her it was fine, but in my mind I was thinking, "There goes my Friday night!"

Just as I was thinking that, I heard someone calling my name. At first, I didn't recognize the person. Then I saw it was a man I 38 with. We used to do everything together when we were kids, but after my family moved out of that town, we lost touch. I was happy and surprised to see him, and he was, too. I asked if he had any plans and he didn't, so we decided to have dinner together.

That was the start of a great new friendship, and we have had many dinners since then. Thanks to that bus ride, I don't hate taking the bus anymore.

Have you ever felt you had to act in a certain way, have a certain look, or do certain things just because of your gender? Many people have thought this way for a long time. Also, these general ideas people have about men and women have affected their roles in society.

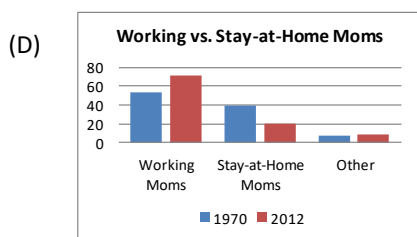

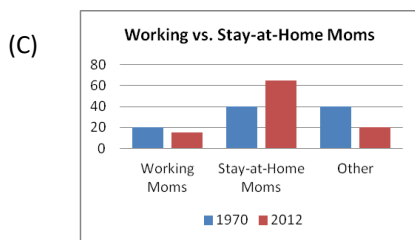

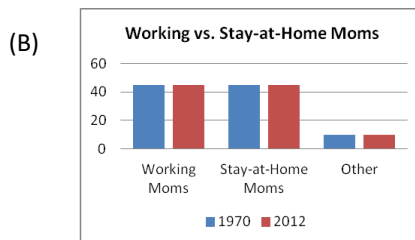

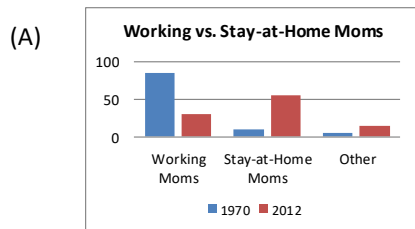

In the past, men had chances for school so that they could find a good job, make money, and support their family. Because of this, they made all of the decisions for the family and what they said was final. Besides that, men had to be strong, and they were not allowed to show any emotion, especially crying. On the other hand, women usually did not go to school. From their mothers, they learned how to take care of the home. They learned how to keep a good house and be a loving mother and wife. What's more, women were not allowed to work outside their homes. They were expected to be gentle, caring, and obedient.

Fortunately for people in this day and age, these old ideas about men and women are changing every day. Now, men can be stay-at-home dads, and women can have high-paying jobs in many different fields. Society is starting to treat everyone equally, and it doesn't matter if that person is a man or a woman.

Gwen : That's right. You know he can never keep a secret.

Sara : I know, but I want him there, too. I really need his help.

Sara : Hey, be nice!

Gwen : Sorry. It's just that you've tried to do this before, but it didn't work because he let the cat out of the bag.

Sara : Well, that's in the past. Anyway, the point is he's the only person Debbie trusts enough to go shopping with.

Todd : Wait! I know how you can make this work.

Sara : How?

Todd : They usually go shopping at the mall on Saturdays, right?

Gwen : So, Sara, all you have to do is find out when and then make plans to meet up with them at the coffee shop.

Todd : Then you get everyone to be there before the meeting time.

Sara : So they could all jump out and shout when we get there, right? That's genius!

How would you feel if you were left alone on an island? Because people have been spending so much more time at home during the coronavirus outbreak, no wonder many people have been trying to deal with similar feelings of isolation. That's why there are more and more people playing games that are about life simulation. In life-simulation games, a player can act one or more characters and controls their everyday activities in a virtual world. In some of these games, players can choose a role themselves within the virtual world.

One of the famous life-simulation games is "Animal Crossing." Animal Crossing lets you become your own character on a virtual island, designing your living places by buying furniture, decorating your home, and visiting friends.

So, what has made people so interested in these life-simulation games? Some may find the idea of controlling the lives of others, or even becoming someone else, very attractive, even though these characters aren't real people. It can show a feeling of freedom they might not have in their real lives. Others enjoy getting away from the troubles of everyday life and getting into a warm and pleasant virtual world. All in all, it is not surprising that the games become more popular these days. During these stressful times, there is something very enjoyable about focusing on a "perfect" version of ordinary life.

Facebook used to be more popular than Instagram, but that is history now. From a study in the USA in May, 2018, 72% of 743 teenagers used Instagram. On the other hand, only 51% of them used Facebook. So Facebook is losing teenagers to Instagram.

Why are teenagers leaving Facebook for Instagram? First, many parents use Facebook, not Instagram. So, when teenagers share things on Instagram, their parents won't know about it. Second, Facebook is a place for people to share information, and Instagram is a place to make friends. Facebook is fine for many adults because they usually just want to share news with each other. For teenagers, however, meeting new friends is more important than keeping up to date, so they like to use Instagram. Third, a lot of teenagers like Instagram better because they enjoy sharing their stories through beautiful pictures and videos. Facebook users usually use more words to share their stories and feelings.

Interestingly, Facebook runs Instagram. It bought Instagram in 2012. Did you know that?
